HOWARD GILES is one of America's most outstanding artists and is well known to collectors and leading museums throughout the country. For many years he served as Dean of Faculty of Fine Arts at the Master Institute of Roerich Museum. His painting, like his teaching, has stood out high above the weltering tides of isms which have engulfed so many of his contemporaries.

The masterful quality of his work demonstrates the truism: "The laws of order in Nature are the principles of design in Art." Few have ever shown greater ability to discriminate between essentials and non-essentials in creating a work of art. In capturing Nature's varying moods in the spirit of design, he has lifted them into a realm of artistic significance rarely achieved.
